LOS ANGELES-Business owners learned the benefits of licensing intellectual property and how to manage licenses at a seminar offered by Lorman Educational Services, Inc. Diane L. Becker, Esq., a partner with Ventura County's largest law firm, Nordman Cormany Hair & Compton LLP, presented "How to Set Up a Program to License Your Intellectual Property," May 25 in Los Angeles.

"Intellectual property is an important business asset that should be used to its full potential," Becker said. "If a company leverages its intellectual property correctly it can become a significant source of revenue."

Becker discussed how to develop a program to license intellectual property, including the pros and cons of licensing, the key business terms of license agreements and license administration.

The former chief legal officer and senior vice president of licensing for Bugle Boy Industries, Inc., Becker formed and leads Nordman Cormany Hair & Compton LLP's General Counsel Services Group and practices in the areas of employment law, corporate and business law and intellectual property law. She represents employers before the Department of Fair Employment and Housing, the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement, the California Employment Development Department, the U.S. Equal Opportunity Commission and the U.S. Department of Labor, among others.

Becker earned her undergraduate and legal degrees from UCLA, where she was admitted to the Order of the Coif, served on the board of editors for the UCLA Law Review and received several academic awards. Becker has written and taught extensively on intellectual property law and has many years of trial experience in matters before the state and federal courts involving intellectual property law matters. She resides with her family in Ventura and is a member of the board of directors of the American Red Cross of Ventura County.
